

Military Community and Family Policy Fact Sheet

Data

- ✓ My Training Hub issued 339 certificates of completion during the first three months the courses were launched.
- ✓ These five courses are available as tools personal finance staff can use in their efforts to educate military members.
- ✓ Unit commanders may want to require their members to complete courses.
- ✓ Family members, civilian employees and military members are all eligible to use these financial readiness courses.

Additional information

My Training Hub

<http://myhub.militaryonesource.mil>

My Training Hub: Financial Readiness Courses

Background

Financial fitness is right at your fingertips with new training for service members and their families. My Training Hub is the Department of Defense's new consolidated, online training platform. It brings learning to life in a convenient online setting that services the entire military community. This platform was created by professionals with the highest standards in training and technology, and responds to different learning preferences, tracks learners' participation and evaluates training outcomes.

Highlights

This series of five online training courses about money management will help service members and their families make sense of their money and become financially savvy. Choose only the courses you're interested in, or take them all:

- Consumer Credit – This course teaches participants all about consumer credit.
- Developing Your Spending Plan – Participants in this course will learn how to create smart financial goals and a realistic spending plan.
- Investing in Your Future – This course teaches participants how to make smart investments.
- Car Buying Strategies – Participants in this course will learn how to negotiate when purchasing a vehicle.
- Money and the Move – This course helps participants learn to make good financial decisions when moving with the military.

