Financial Aid Tips from Military Child Education Coalition (MCEC)

Kerri Beckert, Parent to Parent Trainer

Families may begin submitting FAFSA application on 1 OCT each year. Here are some quick tips to simplify the process

1. Download a FAFSA worksheet from <https://fafsa.ed.gov/> This is a great organizational tool which can help parents identify and gather up the information they need to complete the FAFSA online.
2. Know your deadlines. For many colleges/universities, Early Admission deadlines often coincide with the new 1 OCT FAFSA application window. Both states and universities have deadlines for submitting your information to receive financial aid. Knowing these deadlines can help avoid last minute stress. Plan on filing the FAFSA at least 10 days before the earliest deadline applicable. When state and university deadlines don't match, use the earlier of the two.)
3. For returning students, try to complete the FAFSA before your student returns for their spring semester. Having your student around to electronically sign documents or find information can alleviate last minute scrambling.
4. Financial Aid eligibility is based on the prior year's income, so there is no need to delay application until taxes are completed. For military parents, using your end of year LES is an easy way to retrieve much of the necessary information.
5. Don't panic if you are selected for verification. The government selects about 1 in every 25 applications for income and asset verification. Many times military families are selected as their income can fluctuate greatly from year to year depending on COLA, BAH, PCS, and deployment pay. Selection for verification does not hinder your financial aid process or award.
6. Use the IRS Retrieval Tool on the FAFSA on the web. Parents who submit their taxes electronically to the IRS can use the information retrieval tool to help transfer information from their taxes to their FAFSA.
7. University financial aid offices are a wealth of information. You can also get help from the Federal Student Aid offices: Either online at www.fafsa.gov, or you can call 1-800-4-FED-AID (1-800-433-3243). TTY users (hearing impaired) can call 1-800-730-8913.
8. Remember that the FAFSA stands for FREE Application for Federal Financial Aid. Filing your FAFSA costs nothing and is provided by FAFSA.GOV.
9. Many private colleges and universities use the CSS Profile as well as the FAFSA. Some schools may even have their own additional financial aid application. Check out the school's website or call their financial aid office to find out exactly which forms and information they need. The CSS profile can be found at <http://student.collegeboard.org/css-financial-aid-profile> . Know that the profile is managed by the College Board and is a private organization. The information used in the CSS profile may be different than the FAFSA.
10. Lastly, encourage your student to fill out as many scholarship applications as possible. Although many schools count scholarship money against awards, it is normally used to offset student loan amounts. Remind your student that part of his/her job is to contribute to their own education, and scholarships are a great way of doing so! Look for scholarships in your local community through churches, community organizations, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, Wives Clubs, Military Thrift Stores, the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Fisher House Charities, the Commissary, and many more.

In State Tuition for Military Dependents

In-State Tuition Public colleges and universities typically offer two tuition rates: one for state residents and another – much higher – for students from outside the state. In the past, this system put military families at a disadvantage. States set their own guidelines for in-state tuition eligibility, but most require that students or their families live, own property and/or pay taxes in that state. Military families, who move frequently and often are legal residents of a state other than the one in which they are stationed, could have a difficult time meeting that standard. Luckily, the playing field was leveled for military families in 2009. That year, the Higher Education Opportunity Act was passed, requiring public colleges and universities to grant in-state tuition status to dependent children of service members in the state where they reside or are permanently stationed. Once a dependent child is enrolled and paying in-state tuition, they will continue to pay the in-state tuition rate as long as they remain continuously enrolled at the institution, even if the service member is reassigned outside the state. This law has been a tremendous help to military families, who otherwise might struggle to afford college for their children. However, it's important to know that the law only applies to children of service members on active duty for a period of more than 30 days. It does not apply to the children of retirees or veterans. - See more at: <http://www.militaryfamily.org/kids-operation-purple/#sthash.ylYTjclO.dpuf>

Post-9/11 GI Bill

Note: The Department of Defense has recommended changes that will impact eligibility for dependents. If approved, the changes will go into effect one year after the effective date. As the process continues, the Department of Veteran's Affairs will be the best source of up to date information.

One of the most valuable education benefits available for military families is the Post-9/11 GI Bill. The GI Bill provides up to 36 months of education benefits to eligible beneficiaries. In addition to tuition, beneficiaries may receive a stipend to help pay for books as well as a housing allowance.

Since 2009, service members have had the option of transferring some or all of their GI Bill benefit to their dependent spouses and children. Service members can choose to transfer the entire 36 month benefit to one family member or divide it among their spouse and/or children.

The regulations covering transferability of Post-9/11 GI Bill benefits are complex. Families should review the rules carefully to ensure that they meet all of the requirements for transferring and using the benefit. If your service member chooses to transfer his or her GI Bill benefit, it's important to understand the following:

- Service members must have served at least six years, but not more than 16 years in the armed forces (active duty or Selected Reserve) and agree to serve an additional four years from the date of transfer.
- Although the service member can apply to transfer the benefit after serving six years, children cannot use the benefit until the service member has served for ten years.
- Service members can only apply to transfer benefits while they are still serving, not after retirement or separation.
- Children may not use the benefit until they earn a secondary school diploma (or equivalency certificate), or reach age 18. They cannot use the benefit after reaching age 26.

Service members can apply to transfer their post-9/11 GI Bill benefits online through the MilConnect portal. Step-by-step instructions are available on the MilConnect website. If your student attends a public college or university, the Post-9/11 GI Bill will pay all tuition and fees at the in-state tuition level. For private or foreign colleges and universities, the amount of the benefit is capped at the national maximum rate, which changes annually. Be aware that tuition at private colleges and universities is typically much higher than the national maximum cap. Your costs will also be higher if your child attends a public university as an out-of-state student. Some schools participate in the Yellow Ribbon program, which helps make up the difference between their tuition and what the Post-9/11 GI Bill covers.

Specific questions about paying for your child's education should be directed to the financial aid office at your child's college or university. Those offices are familiar with programs and policies supporting military families and are often willing to work with families to make college affordable for military kids.
